The Painter of Light was pissed off. It was November 20, 2010, less than two years before he died, and Thomas Kinkade was at the Denver Broncos' stadium to unveil Mile High Thunder, his painting for the Tim Tebow Foundation. At 52, he was America's most popular—and the art establishment's most hated—living artist.

Thomas Kinkade, Painter of Light and Hope. He was a hack, and a tremendously successful one. A hack is someone who sells his talent to the highest bidder, with little concern for niceties like artistic integrity. I'm a hack myself, and let me tell you something: if I found a way to create the writing equivalent of a Thomas Kinkade painting,...
